Dear Anzuelo Regadera,

Shutterstock has discovered that you are submitting images (2456939175) to which you do not appear to own the copyright. This is a violation of the Terms of Use that you agreed to upon signing up as a Shutterstock contributor. As such, your account has been disabled.

Shutterstock will only consider an appeal of this decision if one or more of the following is provided to submit@shutterstock.com:

- 1) other images or outtakes taken from the same photoshoot;
- 2) proof of copyright registration; OR
- 3) other evidence that substantiates that you are the copyright holder.

We have withdrawn your content from licensing. Shutterstock will retain copies of content as necessary to fulfill our legal and compliance obligations resulting from our licensing and distribution of such content. Following the expiration of those licenses and obligations, we will delete data in accordance with our records management and destruction policy. You may not open another account.

If you believe you are receiving this message in error, please contact submit@shutterstock.com.

If you have any questions, please contact support at submit@shutterstock.com

Thank You.
